Introduction

The Nursing Research Project Grants Program of the U.S. Public Health Service was established in 1955. The program stemmed from the Public Health Service Act of 1944, which gave the Surgeon General research authority to encourage, cooperate with, and assist appropriate public authorities, scientific institutions, and scientists in the conduct and coordination of research and investigations relating to the cause, diagnosis, treatment, control, and prevention of the physical and mental impairments of man.

The program supports studies dealing with all aspects of nursing practice, the organization and delivery of nursing services to the patient, nursing as an occupation, and ways of communicating research findings. The studies consider the effects of interaction among nurses and other health team workers on patient welfare; appraise nursing practice in the light of new scientific concepts; test the safety, comfort, and economy of nursing units in hospitals and other patient-care facilities; and develop methods to test the care patients receive.

Responding to requests from those interested in nursing and health related research, the Division of Nursing of the U.S. Public Health Service is issuing this current list of research projects funded through July 1967. The intent is to share information about ongoing nursing research. More detailed information about individual projects may be obtained by writing to the principal investigators.

Information about the awarding of grants and the procedure for applying to receive a grant award is contained in Public Health Service Publication No. 1101 (The Division of Nursing's Research Grants and Awards) available from the Division of Nursing.
